Headline:
Windy, remaining rather cold, cloudy and unsettled.

Today:
Remaining unsettled with extensive low cloud as showers move in from the northwest and merge into longer spells of rain. Strong winds throughout with gales over the Peak District. Snow becoming confined to high ground. Cold. Maximum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Tonight:
Winds easing though the evening with cloud clearing, especially in northern Lincolnshire. Rain and snow will fade overnight, with only the Peaks damp by dawn. Rather cold. Minimum temperature 3 deg C (37 deg F).

Thursday:
A mostly dry and bright start, though rather cold. Winds will be mostly light before a band of rain and strong winds approaches from the west later. Maximum temperature 7 deg C (45 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Mostly dry Friday with isolated showers and a northwesterly breeze. A dry start Saturday but rain arriving from the west later as winds strengthen. Likely cloudy with rain Sunday.
